The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Sacramento River National Wildlife Refuge was established in 1989. Consisting of 29 units along a 77-mile stretch of the Sacramento River, the Refuge is managed to maintain, enhance, and restore habitats for migratory birds and threatened and endangered species in a rich mosaic of riparian forest, grassland, and wetland habitats.

The Nature Conservancy began working on the Sacramento River in 1988. Since then, TNC has assisted the Fish and Wildlife Service create the Sacramento River National Wildlife Refuge through planning, property acquisitions, habitat restoration, and research and monitoring.

We look forward to seeing you and celebrating our collective efforts at conserving one of California's greatest treasures.
